Liberal Media Hide Facts and Spin the Truth To Protect Barack Obama and Political Liberals

The way the liberal media have covered the Barack Obama and Rev. Wright scandal, as well as the prostitute scandal involving Eliot Spitzer, now the former Democratic governor of New York, reveals their gross political biases and how far they will go to spin the facts to keep Americans in the dark.

That blatant mis-reporting, which is ongoing in those stories and in many others, shows why the Media Research Center (MRC) is vital to the conservative movement and how it carries on its mission despite the liberal armies with their hundreds of millions of dollars arrayed against it.

Rev. Jeremiah Wright Jr., now pastor emeritus at Trinity United Church of Christ, has been Sen. Barack Obama's (D-III.) pastor and close friend for at least 20 years. Obama has attended his church for two decades; he was married by Wright; and his children were baptized by Wright.

Wright is a flaming black nationalist whose writing, sermons, and rhetoric frequently fall into anti-white and anti-American rants. Typical was a sermon he gave after 9/11 in which he blamed America for the terrorist attacks and, in another talk, railed about the "U.S. of K-K-K-A." There are countless examples of his lunatic speech. He's claimed that the U.S. government invented AIDS as a "genocide" against blacks. Five times in one speech he roared, "God d--- America!"

Despite Wright's maniacal ramblings and that he is Obama's "spiritual adviser" and close friend, the liberal media have tried to spin the acidic truth away. For instance, as the MRC documented, the networks didn't really report on Wright's anti-white "black liberation" ideology until March 2007, more than a year after Obama launched his presidential campaign.

Can you imagine the news stories and endless drip, drip, drip of reports if Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) had attended an anti-American "white liberation" church headed by a wacky, racist pastor?

It would be the top story every day in every major paper and news show until McCain explained himself, left the church and totally rejected his pastor — and then, the liberal media would still hound him.

But with Obama and Wright, the first story came on ABC's World News on Mar. 14, a Friday night (if you want to try to bury a story, roll it out on a Friday night). To its credit, ABC mentioned some of Wright's incendiary remarks

Sen. Barack Obama (D-III.) and his longtime friend and Pastor Rev. Jeremiah Wright Jr., are all hugs and smiles despite Wright's "U.S. of K-K-K-A" rants and blame-America-for-9/11 lunacy, which the liberal media spun as "normal" rhetoric in predominantly black churches.

but gave it a protective spin with comments that such “fiery language” is “not uncommon in black churches.” Three days later, however, neither CBS nor NBC’s evening news shows had touched the issue – no story, no mention, nothing.

CBS’s morning program, The Early Show, gave 13 minutes of coverage to the scandal but aired only 16 seconds of videotape of Wright, and left out the more outrageous remarks. And like ABC, CBS spun the scandal as, well, “that type of talk goes on all the time in black churches” – which is not true, and is an insult to black churches.

The topic did race through the New Media, especially on the Internet, however, with the MRC’s various divisions contributing material. Also, conservative talk radio ran hard with the facts and the liberal media giants were forced to try to spin the unpleasantness away – and so was Obama.

He gave a speech on Mar. 18 on race relations to try to explain his loony pastor and why they were friends for two decades. Almost immediately, liberals like MSNBC’s Chris Matthews were chattering that the speech was “worthy of Abraham Lincoln” and “the best speech ever given on race in this country.”

The Washington Post said the speech was “a very important gift” to America, and The New York Times likened it to speeches by “President Lyndon Johnson, John F. Kennedy and Abraham Lincoln”

More disturbing information has surfaced about Wright and his church – which Oprah Winfrey reportedly left because it was too radical even for her – and that news has been covered by the New Media. But Wright has cancelled all his appearances with Obama, has stepped down as the campaign’s “spiritual adviser,” and his church has pulled its bulletins and monthly magazine (with Wright’s regular column) from its Web site.

They’ve all gone mum and the liberal media are moving on.

But again, ask yourself, if McCain, or Mike Huckabee, or Mitt Romney had attended an explicitly “white liberation” church headed by a wacky hate-spewing pastor, do you think the liberal media would let the story die?

And what about Eliot Spitzer? He was the “crusading” Democratic governor of New York who the liberal media fawned over. When he was caught in a high-priced call girl sting, the liberal media did all they could to hide his party affiliation from the public.

The scandal broke on Monday, Mar. 10. Yet for three days, as documented by the MRC, the NBC Nightly News refused to identify Spitzer as a Democrat. And ABC didn’t identify him for two days.

The morning show NBC Today ran 11 segments on Spitzer over four hours on Tuesday, Mar. 11, with numerous reporters and guests, and yet did not mention that Spitzer is a Democrat. Today ran seven segments on Mar. 12 and never mentioned Spitzer’s party affiliation. They didn’t even put a “D” on-screen by his name.

In another example, USA Today, the most popular paper in the country, ran a front-page story on Spitzer on Mar. 11, and in 1,760 words of text never mentioned he is a Democrat – not even in the photo caption!

But back when Republican Sen. Larry Craig (Idaho) was arrested, in August 2007, for lewd conduct in a men’s bathroom, it was top news for nearly two weeks and he was labeled “Republican” from the get-go in endless news reports. When Rep. Mark Foley (R-Fla.) was caught up in a text-message “dirty talk” scandal in 2006, the liberal networks went ballistic. They ran 152 stories on him over the course of two weeks and in nearly every story identified him as a Republican.

My friends, that is how the liberal media operate. They have one set of journalistic standards for their political friends and another set of standards for political conservatives. They distort, they mis-report, and sometime flat-out lie – or just not report basic facts – to further their agenda.

That’s why the MRC does what it does and why its mission must carry on. The liberal media and their big-money backers are populating the Internet and making inroads into other New Media. We’re keeping watch and we’re fighting back, and we will never back down.

Sincerely,

L. Brent Bozell III
Founder and President

Rev. Jeremiah Wright Jr. lectures his Trinity United Church of Christ congregation that God does not bless America but “God d--- America!”

The Gov. Eliot Spitzer prostitution scandal broke on Mar. 10 but NBC Nightly News, like other liberal media outlets, did not identify Spitzer as a Democrat until three days later despite dozens of stories.

MRC Launches Eyeblast.tv to Battle Liberal Video Presence on Internet

By Danny Glover

In 2006, Democrat James Webb paid less than $1,000 to have a young volunteer track Republican Sen. George Allen of Virginia with a video camera. It was the best money Webb ever spent.

The volunteer was named S.R. Sidharth, but he will forever be remembered as "Macaca," the mocking nickname that Allen gave him in an unguarded moment. Sidharth captured that moment on film, the Webb campaign blasted it over the Internet, and Allen's popularity collapsed. His once-unimaginable loss to Webb shifted control of the Senate to Democrats.

Look no further than the "Macaca" incident to understand why the Media Research Center launched Eyeblast.tv in April 2008.

Eyeblast is an online community built in part to capture the unguarded moments of liberals on film and blast them over the Internet. The liberal media won't cover the politically correct confrontations on college campuses, and they suppress stories of liberals behaving badly. Going forward, conservatives will be able to tell the truth about those encounters on Eyeblast.

But Eyeblast is more than a venue to expose liberals. It is a high-speed tool that will help convince the next generation - 18-to-29-year-olds who get their news online and spread the word the same way -- that the principles and values of conservatism are vital to America's success. To capture the loyalty of future generations, conservatives need to be where young people are: the Internet.

For years, conservatives have ceded the online battlefield in the war of ideas to liberals. The results are apparent in the presidential candidacy of Barack Obama. He is the poster child of tomorrow's liberalism. But he is immensely popular with young people because of his online presence and innovation. Eyeblast will help reverse the new media advantages of the Obamas of the world.

How? First, it will expose liberalism and promote conservatism. Eyeblast will both showcase the work of the MRC and serve as a tool for like-minded conservatives to share their content. The Heritage Foundation and Newt Gingrich's American Solutions are among the early contributors to the site. All of the content can be posted on other Web sites and on blogs.

Social-networking tools are the other key element of Eyeblast. Conservative organizations can create groups to help market their messages, and young conservatives can form new communities within Eyeblast.

The Eyeblast editorial team also will recruit and train a network of citizen video journalists to cover events, contribute to special reports and perhaps do their own regular video shows. The key is to get young people involved so they see Eyeblast as their community and conservatism as a cause to fully embrace. Visit Eyeblast.tv today!

Bits & Pieces

Obama 'The Great'

NBC News reporter Lee Cowan just can't seem to get enough of Democratic presidential contender Sen. Barack Obama. Back in January, Cowan confessed to NBC's Brian Williams that it was "almost hard for him to remain objective" in his coverage of Obama, and in a late March print ad for NBC, Cowan waxed, "When NBC News first assigned me to the Barack Obama campaign, I must confess my knees quaked a bit. I wondered if I was up to the job.

"I wondered if I could do the campaign justice. I wondered if the experience would swallow me whole," for Obama is "a whirlwind of activity, and being caught in that tornado is a challenge every day." And in a final touchy-feely tug, Cowan cooed, "If we come to your town, you'll see us — just look behind the senator. We're all there, for the experience of a lifetime."

NBC reporter Lee Cowan confessed that when NBC News assigned him to cover the Barack Obama campaign, "my knees quaked a bit."

No Reporters Here

CBS Early Show co-host Harry Smith admitted on Mar. 26 what conservatives have long known: The liberal media are largely lap dogs for liberal politicians and liberal ideas. On the show, Washington Post reporter Sally Quinn was asked about the coverage of Chelsea Clinton's snippy response to a question about Monica Lewinsky. When asked whether her mother's credibility had been damaged during the Lewinsky scandal, Chelsea had replied, "Wow, you're the first person actually that's ever asked me that question... and I don't think it's any of your business." And the liberal media took Chelsea's cue and pretty much shut up.

To which Quinn told Harry Smith: "Frankly, in all of my years of journalism, I have never seen the press lie down like this before. This is — this is not what the American public thinks of as the critical and sort of — killing, marauding, press corps." Then Smith chimed in: "Yeah, we're not exactly we're not exactly watchdogs here. ... As a press, though, we have basically, you know, said, 'okay, if those are the rules, you know, that's fine.' Have we sort of — you know, have we laid down?" Bingo!

MRC Scoops CBS

CBS has millions of dollars and countless staff but it clearly has trouble keeping up with events and capitalizing on obvious, no-brainer stories. Case in point: Democratic presidential contender Hillary Clinton falsely claimed on Mar. 17 that when she flew into Bosnia in the 1990s, it was under sniper fire and the landing ceremony had to be cancelled because of the supposed danger. The next day, the MRC reported, based on video footage of that Bosnia trip (recorded and archived by the MRC), that Clinton was lying through her teeth — no sniper fire, no heads down, and a pleasant airstrip landing ceremony.

Thanks to its vast news archive, the MRC scooped — by 7 days! — CBS and much of the major media in pointing out on Mar. 18 that Hillary Clinton did not tell the truth about her "sniper fire" trip to Bosnia.

CBS did nothing for an entire week. Finally, one of its own reporters pulled up some footage of the trip, which the reporter had attended, and — finally—seven days after the Clinton fib, reported that the former first lady had, uh, lied — a big whopper lie.

The week-late CBS Evening News report, on Mar. 24, used the same footage as first posted by the MRC on Mar. 18.

Cafferty's Brain

CNN's Jack Cafferty, who provides commentary on the daily Situation Room program, downplayed the anti-American and lunatic-fringe rants of Rev. Jeremiah Wright, the "spiritual adviser" to and decades-long pastor for Sen. Barack Obama and, instead, railed that conservative preachers were worse. On the March 17 show, Cafferty, who has dismissed abortion as a "crap" issue, asserted: "How is this different than John McCain chasing after Pat Robertson or the late Reverend Jerry Falwell, who talk about how we have a culture of murdering unborn children in this country and that we've turned into Sodom because we coddled the gay community in this country?"

CNN's Jack Cafferty declares the hate-filled, AIDS-is-a-government-conspiracy jibberish of Sen. Obama's pastor Jeremiah Wright is no different than the pro-life messages of Jerry Falwell or Pat Robertson.

"I mean, to me, that stuff is considerably more offensive than decrying racial violence and intolerance in this country, which members of the black community have some firsthand knowledge of."

Liberal Media?

A survey from the Pew Research Center released on Mar. 17 confirmed the obvious: Compared to the views of the public, conservatives are under-represented in national journalism while liberals are over-represented. The survey info was — no surprise — buried in the annual "State of the Media" report from Pew's Project for Excellence in Journalism and its poll of 222 journalists and news executives at national outlets revealed the following: "Only six percent said they considered themselves conservatives and only two percent said they were very conservative. This compares with 36 percent of the overall population that describes itself as conservative. Most journalists, 53 percent, said they're moderate. 24 percent said they were liberal and eight percent very liberal." Only 19 percent of the public consider themselves liberal. And it's not much of a leap to presume many of the 53 percent who describe themselves as "moderate" are really quite liberal. All in all, more evidence that confirms what the MRC has been documenting for 20 years.

Pew's Project for Excellence in Journalism and its poll of 222 journalists and news executives at national outlets revealed the following: "Only six percent said they considered themselves conservatives..."

Hard-Boiled

MSNBC's Chris Matthews can't seem to get his head (or his ability to think) out of the 1960s. During the March 4 Super Tuesday II coverage, Matthews blabbered to his leftist colleague Keith Olbermann: "You and I, who are on the air all the time, know that the box this campaign came in is marked 'change.' This country's in a rut, on the war in Iraq and pending wars elsewhere in the Middle East, the economy, everything, we're in a rut. We can't fix anything, whether it's Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security, we can't fix our health care system.

"Nothing's been done since '65 when we did the civil rights bill. People want something done. Will that something get done if we have an election that bogs down in Pennsylvania with seven weeks of Democrats killing each other? That's a question everybody ought to ask, not just Hillary Clinton or Bill Clinton."

Minibits

■ MSNBC's Chris Matthews loses all sense of reason and emotional control in response to Sen. Barack Obama's disingenuous speech on race relations, drooling, "A speech worthy of Abraham Lincoln. ... An American tract. Something that you just check in with, now and then, like reading The Great Gatsby and Huckleberry Finn. ... One of the great speeches in American history." ■ CNN's Anderson Cooper dismisses the Rev. Wright and Obama scandal because "all this seems to have nothing to do with actual issues that the country is facing, which these candidates should be talking about and we probably should be talking about." ■ And MSNBC's Norah O'Donnell huffs about the scandal, "How do we get away from this?" ■ Dan Rather (naturally) defends The New York Times' shoddy hit piece on Sen. McCain and a female lobbyist with this logic: "These are not ordinary journalists. These are outstanding journalists and that probably needs to be said." ■ GOP-ers voting for Hillary Clinton in the primaries is a "right-wing" plan "to damage not just the Democratic Party but perhaps the democratic process," whines MSNBC's Dan Abrams. ■ Newsweek's Eleanor Clift frets, "Women have waited decades to see the first woman president, and it's actually something of a tragedy that a talented African-American guy comes along at the same — this isn't liberal guilt." ■ An internal CNN memo dictates how reporters should cover Fidel Castro's resignation: "Please note Fidel did bring social reforms to Cuba — namely free education and universal health care, and racial integration — in addition to being criticized for oppressing human rights and freedom of speech." ■ On Fox's Geraldo at Large, actor Richard Belzer defines America "as a war-mongering, far-right, intolerant nation who's raping our own atmosphere and demonizing the poor."

Dan Rather, who lost his CBS job largely because of shoddy reporting, defends the NYT's shoddy reporting.

Latest CMI Special Reports Expose Dear Abby's Sexual Permissiveness and Liberal Media Promotion of Atheism

Did you know that Dear Abby supports same-sex marriage? Or that Newsweek mentioned atheism in half its issues last year?

The MRC's Culture and Media Institute (CMI) tackled both these topics in unique special reports released during the first quarter of 2008. The studies, Down a Dark Abby and Apostles of Atheism, generated unprecedented opportunities for the MRC in grassroots activism and media coverage, including prominent display on Dr. Laura's Web site.

In February CMI released Down a Dark Abby by Research Assistant Colleen Raezler, which revealed that syndicated advice columnist Dear Abby, despite her reputation for "dispensing solid, homespun wisdom," sounds like Dr. Ruth when it comes to sex. Key findings of the study include:

- * Abby almost never finds adultery wrong. Only once in 365 columns in 2007 did Abby flatly state adultery was wrong.

- * Abby fails to tell sexually active teens to stop having sex. Abby's focus is not on abstinence but rather on protection from pregnancy and STDs. Even for 12-year-olds.

- * Homosexuality is perfectly okay to Abby. Last October, Abby announced her support for same-sex "marriage."

Alongside the Abby report, CMI issued a call to action, asking MRC supporters to contact Dear Abby's syndicator, United Press Syndicate, and petition the agency to run the following disclaimer with Abby's column.

Note to the Reader: Dear Abby is not an accredited professional. Dear Abby's column is suitable only for entertainment, and should not be considered a reliable source for advice about sexual morality.

As of press time, Abby's syndicator has received nearly 4,000 petitions from MRC activists!

During Easter week, CMI Director Robert Knight

appeared with Rev. Pat Robertson on The 700 Club and on CBN's NewsWatch to talk about the MRC's first-ever special report analyzing the media's treatment of atheism, Apostles of Atheism. The study, by Senior Writer Kristen Fyfe, analyzed all of the 2007 coverage on broadcast news programs, the leading weekly news magazines and four of National Public Radio's news programs.

The Special Report proved that the liberal media gave atheism a free pass, with fully 80 percent of feature stories about atheism being positive. No feature stories about atheism were negative. The study also showed that journalists used atheists to challenge religious viewpoints more than they used religious thinkers to challenge atheism. In the report's conclusion, CMI encouraged journalists to apply the same skepticism to atheism that they routinely apply to Christianity.

CMI has heard back from religion reporters at several news outlets who have said the study has challenged them to reevaluate how they report their stories. Now that's good news!
